The right dog for you is....?

Looking for the right dog to join your household is quite a challenge with so many different possible breeds. Decision making can be quite daunting. Today, there is the Internet with 'find the right dog' quizzes and questionnaires to provide a starting point. But just like buying a pair of shoes on-line, until you try them you just don't know. Finding out as much as you can about the breeds is essential and we always advise seeing the breed, talking to owners before you make that important choice.

Just a little about the Aussie

Aussies are not one of the big breeds, although many of us think they have the approach to life of a larger dog. As you can see even when young they have this confidence.

There are no specific health issues and Aussies can and do live into their teens. Currently, the oldest is 18 years. The dogs like to be around family and enjoy the company of other dogs and pets.

And the puppies look so different to adults. Everyone is amazed how much they change.

The Australian Terrier or to its friends – The Aussie

When it comes to the not over popularised breeds, many ideal dogs can be overlooked. The Australian Terrier falls into this category. You may be reading this having just found out about this delightful breed. You are probably thinking they must be a newcomer to Europe, but they have been in the UK since 1896. These great companion dogs were developed in Australia to be versatile and as a result they continue to adapt to the ever changing lifestyles of dog owners. Today's dog owners are looking for a dog that is perfect for their lifestyle and that is why more and more owners are finding out about our Aussies. The secret's out.....

Aussies have different coat colours - red and sandy, plus the blue and tan.

Looking after your Aussie is comparatively easy. They do not need clipping or regular stripping out of the coat. Breeder will offer advice and help. The day to day brushing and combing can be easily done at home. They enjoy walks and are happy in towns and country. Wherever their owners live, as this breed loves to be part of a family, whether its out and about, walking, in the car, playing with the family – or quite simply chilling out!
